Federal

The Edwards Ferry Brick Store was two stories tall on a stone foundation, constructed of 7-course common bond with flat brick arches over the door and window openings of the side and rear facades. The main (east) facade had a central double door with a transom, and flanking shuttered windows, all sharing a common large timber lintel. The second floor also had three openings. The north bay held a 2/2 sash window, but the other two may have both held doors, implying that the first floor may have been sheltered by a one-story porch prior to the Late 19th-Early 20th century photograph on display at the site. Above the second floor, the east facade was finished with a stepped parapet, pierced by a single small window in the attic. The north facade of the building was pierced by two windows on each floor, with a great deal of wall space between. The west facade has a central doorway on the first floor, and an unknown number of window openings above. The south facade appears to have a single first-floor window, toward the west end, and two above. The interior walls were plastered. Floor joists were circular-sawn 2 x 12s. Flood damage in 1996 forced the National Park Service to partially tear down the unstable structure.

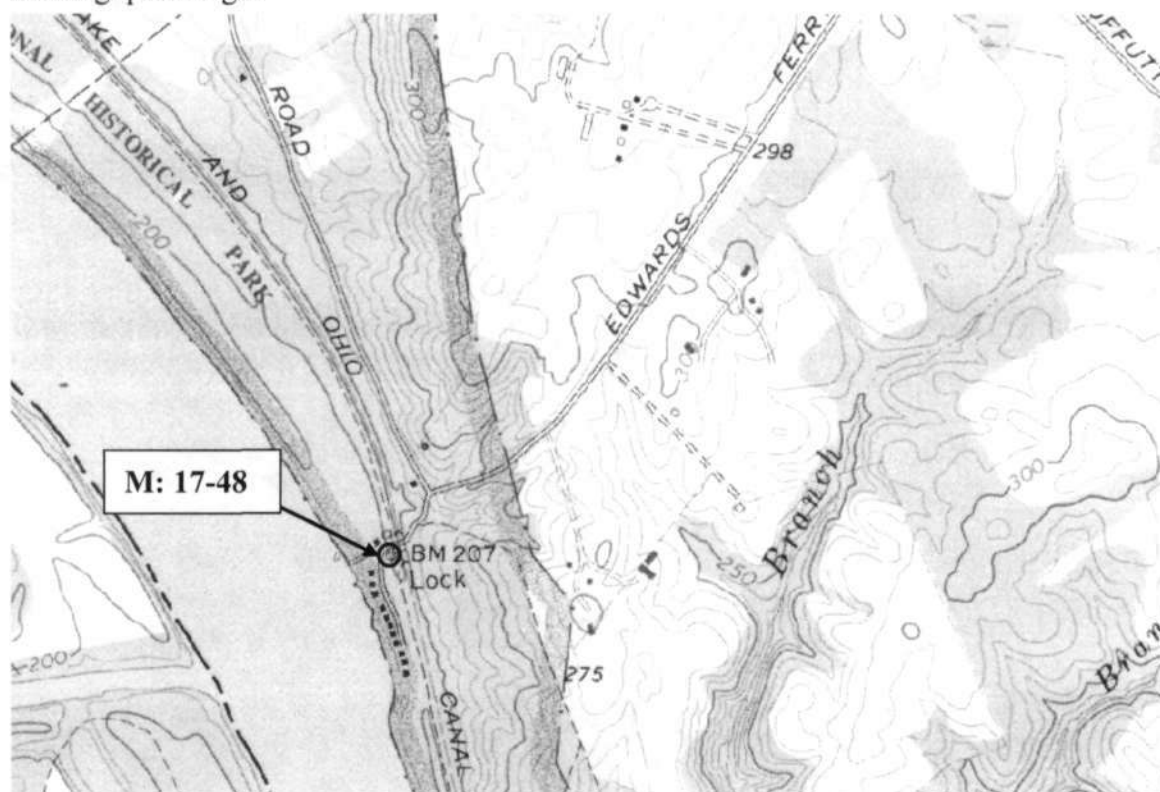

Identified by the Park Service as Jarboe's Store, the building was a general store and post office operated by Eugene E. Jarboe in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.
